Have you ever heard of a FUKURIKOUSEI before?

Fukurikousei is a benefit every employee in Japan is entitled to receive.

This was aimed to support the health and life of employees and their families.

This Fukurikousei is not bound by the law, but is a benefit that Companies voluntarily provides to their employees.

For example, in many other countries, commuting fees are paid by workers themselves, as some of you might already know, but it is common for companies to cover the commuting fees for their employees in Japan.

The welfare provided by companies are unique in Japan when compared to other countries.

Although Japanese companies provides gracious Fukurikousei, the details differ depending on the company. Some have more benefits than the others.

Hoikuen, despites the structure of big or small, provides one of the best Fukurikousei in Japan.

If you are hired as full-time worker, you will be entitled to the same Fukurikousei as the Japanese Hoikushi.

Note that you will not be entitled to all of them if you work as part-time.
